

Why I Own Two of Them (And Both Are Crappy)

I own two Alliance Paradigms. One had 135 defects in the first year. The other one flooded the first night we owned it. And I'm still living in it.

After 135 defects on the first one, the owner of Alliance personally called me. Said the next one would be different. We traded in. First night with the new rig, it rained — and this compartment right here — was full of water. Not damp. Standing water.

If this were just a one-family problem, I'd shut up. But scroll the Alliance owner forums. You'll find hundreds of posts. The pattern's documented. Their own service bulletins acknowledge leak points.

THE BOTTOM LINE

Every Monday this summer I'm doing one manufacturer. Twelve more coming. Comment your brand below — I'll tell you exactly what I'd ask before signing. Follow so you don't miss yours.
