

Why the Bad RV Beats the Office Cubicle

I work from this rig. Defective rig. Frustrating rig. Still beats a cubicle. Here's why.

Bad day at the cubicle — fluorescent lights, dead air, traffic home, dinner is leftovers, sleep, repeat. Bad day in the RV — broken slide-out, frustration, frustration, walk outside, look up, mountains. The frustration is the same. The view is not.

I'm not saying everyone should sell the house. I'm saying — the defective lifestyle still beats the over-fluorescent one. The work is still work. The defects are still defects. But the floor under your feet matters.

If you're in a cubicle right now and the RV dream feels far — start with one weekend a month. Rent a rig. Don't buy. Don't sign anything. Just go. Find out if the lifestyle is yours.

If it is — start saving. Start reading. Find me on Instagram and ask questions. The rig industry will try to break you. The lifestyle will heal you. Both true.

THE BOTTOM LINE

Back to it tomorrow. The luxury-tier rabbit hole. See you Monday.
